The session emphasized the importance of creating a safe and inclusive working environment free from intimidation and discrimination. It highlighted how the Vishaka Guidelines laid the foundation for the POSH Act, which mandates the establishment of Internal Complaints Committees, awareness programmes, structured complaint mechanisms, and protection for survivors. The seminar further brought attention to various forms of women's rights violations, including domestic violence, workplace discrimination, dowry harassment, trafficking, and emotional and psychological abuse, thereby broadening students' understanding of gender-based injustices. Another significant component of the session focused on the reasons why human rights often fail to become daily essentials in the lives of many individuals. Factors such as discrimination and inequality, denial of basic needs like food, shelter, and healthcare, violence and abuse, restriction of freedoms, exploitation and forced labour, and lack of effective legal access were discussed. The session highlighted that while rights exist in legal frameworks, systemic inequalities frequently hinder their realization in practice. The concluding segment of the session emphasized ways in which human rights can be integrated into everyday life, underscoring the role of education and awareness, conscious personal choices, active community participation, advocacy for justice, self-care, and continuous reflection. The seminar inspired students to become socially aware, empathetic, and responsible citizens, committed to upholding human dignity in their daily interactions.
